Monthly Commentary | As of 30 April 2026

Executive summary

Key events in market

The MSCI AC Asia ex Japan index was up 16.3% for the month. Korea dominated returns once again with tech heavy Taiwan supporting the artificial intelligence (AI) hardware rally. Defensive markets in ASEAN underperformed and, in line with this stance, defensive sectors such as healthcare and consumer staples also underperformed, while IT and tech-related industries were the strongest in April.

Key performance & positioning updates

The Fund gained 16.8% in April. Country allocation detracted 80 bps, mainly due to our underweight in outperforming Taiwan. Sector allocation was also negative, reflecting our underweight in IT, although this is misleading as we hold many small-cap, high-beta IT names in Taiwan and tech-oriented industrials. Cash, averaging 3–3.5%, also modestly dragged performance given the strong market backdrop.

House view

Global equity markets rebounded strongly in April, as the concern about the impact of the war in the Persian Gulf on the economy receded. This was due to indirect talks between the US and Iran, which started thanks to the mediation of Pakistan. The MSCI All Countries World Index rose 10.2%, bringing its year-to-date gains to 6.8%. Performance was led by the US (S&P 500 +10.5%) and emerging Asia (+13.8%), while other major equity markets underperformed despite posting strong gains for the month.

In the fixed income market, government bond yields rose slightly, returning close to recent highs, reflecting concerns about rising inflation and more hawkish comments from central banks. However, investors' increased risk appetite favoured a decline in corporate bond spreads.

In the currency market, the US dollar lost almost 2% for the month but remains within the trading range it has held since June last year. Finally, the price of oil and other commodities, including precious and industrial metals, rose as a result of the ongoing blockade of the Strait of Hormuz.

The apparent contradiction between commodity price trends and growing concerns about potential shortages of strategic inputs if the Strait of Hormuz remains closed to commercial shipping, versus the all-time highs reached by stock markets can be explained by examining corporate earnings. The earnings season for the first quarter of 2026 and the upward revision of analysts' estimates for the full year 2026, once again driven by the technology sector, helps to make sense of the markets' sudden recovery after the March sell-off. Furthermore, stock markets have also found support in the progress toward the nomination of Kevin Warsh as the new Chairman of the Federal Reserve. Warsh is regarded as being more inclined to reduce interest rates based on the anticipated disinflationary effect of the spread of artificial intelligence, as he explained during the Senate Banking Committee hearing. Moreover, Warsh favours reducing the size of the Fed's balance sheet and simplifying its composition, factors that help explain the rise in Treasury yields.

Fund performance and positioning

The best performing stocks were IT related - ASE Technology in Taiwan and Innolight in China. Zhongji Innolight produces optical modules/transceivers that go into networking switches used in Nvidia and Google artificial intelligence (AI) data centers. They are a global leader in the higher end 1.6T bandwidth modules needed in the highest end of such AI servers and should become standard speed over the coming years. Given Google is starting to extend their lead vs other cloud service providers with regard to their chip designs and frontier models, those in the supply chain were particularly strong. Taiwan large cap, ASE Technology is involved in semi chip testing, packaging and assembly. Predominately they are exposed to more mature node chips used in everyday consumer electronics where demand trends are relatively tepid. AI related packaging such as CoWos (Chip on Wafer on Substrate) has been held inside foundries such as TSMC previously, but now due to such extensive demand, this is being outsourced by TSMC and/or their clients such as Nvidia direct to ASE.

On the downside, China Merchant Bank (CMB) and DBS were the worst performers for the month. DBS was strong through the Middle East conflict as a net beneficiary to higher oil prices given loan exposure to Singapore oil trading. Their business is also exposed to US yields which rallied from inflation concerns. As oil prices and inflation concerns started to subside, DBS was prone to profit taking. CMB reported poor earnings which largely reflects struggles in China's banking sector, from lower yields hurting margin whilst higher competition arises from weakness in loan demand. CMB is more wealth/retail driven than others but it is this area that is suffering the most. There is also management change after the CEO of 31 years resigned. They also did a quasi capital raise which suggested to some that tougher times remain ahead. CMB is historically more correlated to China's property market which more recently (as noted below) is slightly improving. Given we will not invest in property developers directly, CMB can give the portfolio exposure to this view whilst remaining underweight the area as a whole.

During the month we added Wuxi Aptec who outsource small molecular drugs globally. The stock was pressured by geopolitics in the past but this overhang has for now been removed. Order backlog returned to growth in 2h25 with peptide revenue growing over 50% on GLP1 demand.

Given we will not invest in property developers directly, CMB can give the portfolio exposure to this view whilst remaining underweight the area as a whole.

Outlook

In China, secondary home sales grew 30% in April into early May with Shanghai sales at a 10 year high, albeit benefitting from the early timing of Chinese New Year. Regardless, there are incremental signs of stabilisation in prior weaker areas and slight improvement in prior stabilised areas. For example, China consumer staples and sportswear companies are reporting more stable demand after a dire prior year. This is partly because they had less subsidy support so their base is lower. On the flipside, those that were strong due to prior subsidies are now experiencing demand drop offs, such as auto sales volumes that are deeply negative year-on-year and also home appliances.

Continuing the mixed trend, travel demand remains robust but dining in remains weak on continued trading down. Hang Seng Tech companies have significantly underperformed in recent months as margins have compressed with their heavy cloud/AI model/AI promo investment without the corresponding revenue uplift, albeit cloud revenue growth appears strong. The problem is, like everything in China, the race to the bottom in pricing means it will be even harder to monetise outside China. With that said, we are conscious of the rotation from semiconductor stocks to areas such as Internet from profit taking and given our underweight in China Internet, we will more likely look to add to preferred stocks such as Alibaba whilst remaining underweight. We reduced India exposure to neutral as earning trends continue to fail to impress from the recent quarterly results.

Whilst top down data remains supportive, there is a mismatch not just to the bottom up story that shows negative revisions and revenue trends, but also incremental market signs, such as credit spreads at extended levels vs. history. Technically India turned to a bear market in March. We are not adding further to Taiwan or Korean tech stocks given the dramatic rally in recent weeks/months as a whole though will add and trim within our existing exposure to take advantage of laggards vs outperformers. As a whole our IT exposure remains unchanged given such lack of strength in trends elsewhere in sectors. Here lies the balance, whereby valuations and technicals are extended in these areas, yet revenue (and margin) momentum, earning surprises and revisions continue to trend to the upside. For us, the latter usually proves more powerful than the former, at least valuation, however trimming in extreme conditions (such as now) is warranted vs outright selling.

We are conscious of the rotation from semiconductor stocks to areas such as Internet .

Risks associated with debt instruments with loss-absorption features – the Fund/Note/Account may invest in debt instruments with loss-absorption features, for example, contingent convertible debt securities (“CoCos”), senior non-preferred debts and subordinated debts issued by financial institutions. These debt instruments are subject to greater risks when compared to traditional debt instruments as such instruments typically include terms and conditions which may result in them being partly or wholly written off, written down, or converted to ordinary shares of the issuer upon the occurrence of a pre-defined trigger event (e.g. when the issuer is near or at the point of non-viability or when the issuer's capital ratio falls to a specified level). Such trigger events are likely to be outside of the issuer's control and are complex and difficult to predict and can result in a significant or total reduction in the value of such instruments.
